

Pawel Pokrzywinski

Over the last decades, more than two million Poles have left their home for other EU countries, mostly the UK. Of the emigrants, one in five has a higher education. Yet despite their skills, they mostly hold ordinary jobs abroad, a stark example of brain waste. Of course, there is a huge amount of frustration of this situation, but most emigrants believe that this is the price for their kids to have a better future. So far, less than five percent of emigrants have returned home, because here are few jobs available to them in Poland.

